EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

LMI Group prepared this paper, examining the restriction of cover being offered by insurers on infectious disease, following the significant increase in reported cases of the H5N1 virus (avian influenza) in 2006. This paper has been updated to cover the H1N1 virus (swine influenza) outbreak in 2009. Of particular concern is that:

(a) the traditional cover would be reduced considerably as a result of an overreaction to the threat of avian influenza (‘throwing the baby out with the bath water’ as occurred with terrorism following ‘September 11’); and

(b) an inconsistent approach being adopted by insurers, which could result in a derogation of cover for infectious disease when a broker changes insurance carriers for any reason.

Examination of the real exposure posed by avian influenza and the H5N1 strain in particular, concluded that some restriction in cover was warranted for the overall good of the insurance industry and the Australian economy. This view remains the same following the swine influenza outbreak.

The research has found that the majority of major insurers in Australia have taken what can fairly be said to be a measured and reasonable approach to the threat caused by both avian influenza and swine influenza.

On the other hand, the response has not been uniform and some insurers have opted to restrict cover for all disease and, in some cases, have gone further and reduced cover for murder and suicide, which purely by tradition has often been bundled up with the infectious disease cover. Without a standard industry-wide approach, it creates a risk to the broker of failing to advise their client of a reduction in cover when the broker changes underwriter for any reason.

The paper concludes with a recommendation for further reinforcement of training/education for insurance brokers on this point, and the opportunity that such events have for insurance advisers to introduce Business Continuity Management to their clients.

INTRODUCTION

Brief

Following the significant increase in reported cases of the H5N1 virus (avian influenza) in 2006, LMI Group prepared this white paper, examining the restriction of cover being offered by insurers on infectious disease. The paper has been updated to cover the H1N1 virus (swine influenza) outbreak in 2009.

Of particular concern is that:

(a) the traditional cover would be reduced considerably as a result of an overreaction to the threat of avian influenza (‘throwing the baby out with the bath water’ as occurred with terrorism following ‘September 11’); and

(b) an inconsistent approach being adopted by insurers, which could result in a derogation of cover for infectious disease when a broker changes insurance carriers for any reason.

Background (Avian Influenza)

Since 1959, there have been 24 outbreaks of High Pathogenicity avian influenza (“HPAI”)¹ recorded worldwide, of which 14 have occurred since 1995. Only one strain, known as H5N1, has spread internationally².

As at 12 March 2007, 268 cases had been reported of people contracting the H5N1 virus³. Of these, 168 people are known to have died of the infection⁴.

While the virus was first seen in Hong Kong, cases have now been reported in the United Kingdom, mainland Europe, Africa, the Middle East, and both northern and southern regions of Asia. This includes Indonesia, where cases of H5N1 have been reported⁵ in two of its provinces: West Irian Jaya and Papua, which are both located on the New Guinea mainland (on Australia’s doorstep).

¹ High Pathogenicity Avian Influenza (“HPAI”) spreads very rapidly through poultry flocks. The disease affects multiple internal organs, and has a mortality that can approach 100%, often within 48 hours. (World Health Organization, 2007)

In domestic poultry, infection with avian influenza viruses causes two main forms of disease, distinguished by low and high extremes of virulence. The so-called ‘low pathogenic’ form commonly causes only mild symptoms (ruffled feathers, a drop in egg production) and may easily go undetected. The high pathogenic form is far more dramatic, spreading very rapidly through poultry flocks, causing disease that affects multiple internal organs and has a mortality that can approach 100%, often within 48 hours7.

While H5N1 is the strain most reported of late, there are in fact many types of bird (or avian) flu. The most contagious strains, which are usually fatal in birds, are H5 and H7. There are nine different types of H5. All nine take different forms; some are highly pathogenic, while some are fairly harmless8.

The current outbreaks of highly pathogenic avian influenza, which began in Southeast Asia in mid-20039, are the largest and most severe on record. Never before in the history of this disease have so many countries been simultaneously affected, resulting in the loss of so many birds10. The causative agent, the H5N1 virus, has proved to be especially tenacious. Despite the death or destruction of an estimated 150 million birds, the virus is now considered endemic in many parts of Indonesia and Vietnam, as well as in some parts of Cambodia, China, Thailand, and possibly also the Lao People’s Democratic Republic. Control of the disease in poultry is expected to take several years11.

9 Hong Kong has experienced two outbreaks in the past. In 1997, in the first recorded instance of human infection with H5N1, the virus infected 18 people and killed 6 of them. In early 2003, the virus caused two infections, with one death, in a Hong Kong family with a recent travel history to southern China World Health Organization (2007).

Risks to Human Health

The H5N1 virus poses two main risks for human health\(^{12}\). The first is the risk of direct infection when the virus passes from poultry to humans, resulting in very severe disease\(^{13}\). This occurs through close contact with live, infected birds.

Birds excrete the H5N1 virus in their faeces, which dries and is pulverised into dust. This dust then becomes airborne and can be inhaled\(^{14}\). To date, most human cases have occurred in rural or peri-urban areas, where a large number of households keep small poultry flocks, which often roam freely, sometimes entering homes or sharing outdoor areas where children play\(^{15}\). As a direct result of the infected birds shedding large quantities of virus in their faeces, opportunities abound for exposure by humans to infected droppings, or at the very least, an environment contaminated by the virus\(^{16}\). Moreover, as many households in Asia depend on poultry for income and food, many families sell or slaughter and consume birds when signs of illness appear in a flock, and this practice has proved difficult to change. Exposure is considered most likely to occur during the slaughter, de-feathering, butchering, and preparation of poultry for cooking\(^{17}\).

Early symptoms of the infection are similar to other types of flu, ie. fever, malaise, sore throats and coughs. People can also develop conjunctivitis\(^{18}\). However, unlike normal seasonal influenza, where infection causes only mild respiratory symptoms in most people, the disease caused by H5N1 follows an unusually aggressive clinical course, with rapid deterioration and high fatality. Primary viral pneumonia and multi-organ failure are common. In the current outbreak (ie. since mid-2003), more than half of those infected with the virus have died. Most cases occurred in previously healthy children and young adults\(^{19}\).

The second risk, which is of even greater concern, is that if the virus is given enough opportunities, it will change into a form that is highly infectious for humans and spreads easily from person to person. Such a change could mark the start of a global outbreak (a pandemic)\(^{20}\). This of course is of great concern to both insurers and reinsurers worldwide\(^{21}\).

It was previously thought that the virus was not spreading from human-to-human as it was embedded so deeply in the lungs that it could not be coughed up (coughing up the virus would have enabled the virus to be spread)\(^{22}\). Researchers are now concerned because scientists studying a case in Vietnam found the virus can affect all parts of the body, not just the lungs. This could mean that many illnesses, and even deaths, thought to have been caused by another source, may have been due to the bird flu virus\(^{23}\). What is now certain is that in the current outbreak of H5N1, laboratory-confirmed cases of human-to-human infection have been reported in four countries: Cambodia, Indonesia, Thailand, and Vietnam\(^{24}\).

Also of concern is the fact that of the few avian influenza viruses that have crossed the species barrier to infect humans, H5N1 has caused the largest number of cases of severe disease and death in humans\(^{25}\).

The Real Threat to Australia

While the United Nations’ World Health Organization ("WHO") state that there is no failsafe way of preventing H5N1 from spreading to Australia or any other country, it is vital to prevent wild birds getting into poultry houses, which is the way the virus is believed to have spread westward from Hong Kong and China\(^{26}\). In addition, WHO advise that monitoring of the migratory patterns of wild birds should provide an early alert of the arrival of infected flocks - meaning they could be targeted on arrival\(^{27}\).

Australia’s domestic birds appear to have avoided infection by any migratory birds, with Australian Quarantine Inspection Service ("AQIS") stepping up vigilance after the initial outbreak\(^{28}\). As such, as at the date of this paper, no cases of H5N1 have been reported in Australia\(^{29}\).

In areas free of the disease, poultry and poultry products can be prepared and consumed as usual (following good hygienic practices and proper cooking), with no fear of acquiring infection with the H5N1 virus\(^{30}\).

The real threat to Australia is if the H5N1 virus mutates from predominately bird-to-bird and/or the less frequent, bird-to-human contamination, to the frightening human-to-human spread of the disease\(^{31}\). How this could occur is discussed later in this paper.

Many commentators and scientists believe that the mutation of H5N1 or some similar virus is inevitable\(^{32}\). Further, that with the increase in international travel, the spread around the world will be much faster than the last major pandemic-the 'Spanish flu' (H1N1)\(^{33}\)-which is believed to have killed between 20 million and 50 million people between 1918 and 1919\(^{34, 35}\). In the case of the Spanish flu, it took only 6 weeks to spread around the world\(^{36}\). While this may be considered fast, scientists believe that a new pandemic could spread globally within a matter of days\(^{37}\). As a matter of interest, although there were between 12,000 and 13,000 deaths from the Spanish flu, Australia had one of the lowest rates of death in the world at only 2.2 to 2.4 deaths per thousand people\(^{38}\). The primary reason for this was that Australia simply closed its borders\(^{39}\).

With the H1N1 virus (Spanish flu), the disease killed quickly, with many cases of documented mortality in less than 48 hours\(^{40}\).

Section 3
THE DISEASE

In the 2006 paper titled ‘Pandemic Influenza – Report with Evidence’, the House of Lords\textsuperscript{41} accepted the following explanation of the disease.

“Influenza, or flu, is a viral infection caused by the influenza virus which affects the respiratory tract. The virus was first identified in 1933, though the disease was familiar long before this. The symptoms include fever, runny or blocked nose, cough, sore throat, aching muscles, and joints, tiredness, headache, vomiting and diarrhoea. However, similar symptoms, particularly the first few, can be caused by other respiratory viruses, and what is described as “the flu” is usually caused by other viruses which cause upper respiratory illness, such as the common cold virus.

For the purposes of contingency planning, influenza can be divided into three categories:

- ‘Ordinary’ influenza circulates constantly in the human population, typically peaking in the winter months, and affecting around 10 percent of the population over the course of a year;
- ‘Avian’ influenza\textsuperscript{42} is a disease of birds, caused by strains of the virus that are endemic in wild birds, and which do not normally infect man, though they periodically cause destructive endemics among poultry;
- ‘Pandemic’ influenza in humans, so called because of its global spread, typically infects around a quarter of the world’s population within the space of a few months. It occurs on average around 3 times a century\textsuperscript{43}, when a strain of avian influenza acquires the ability to infect and pass efficiently between humans. As this is a new virus to humans, there is no immunity, and the disease spreads rapidly. Strains of pandemic influenza vary widely in virulence. Some past pandemic strains have in fact been less virulent than “ordinary” influenza; others (notably in 1918-19) have been significantly more virulent, with high mortality rates.

The Virus; Classification

The most severe infections, whether avian or human, are caused by “influenza A”\textsuperscript{44} type viruses, which are in turn divided into subtypes by reference to their 15 different haemagglutinin (H) and nine different neuraminidase (N) antigens\textsuperscript{45}. These are protein spikes on the virus surface. Haemagglutinin allows the virus to bind onto healthy cells, while neuraminidase allows the virus to break out of infected cells, so that it can move onto other cells and spread infection throughout the body. H and N antigens are important to immunity to and treatment of influenza.”

\textsuperscript{41} House of Lords (2006)
\textsuperscript{42} In 1955, it was discovered that avian flu was caused by Influenza A virus. (House of Lords, 2006)
\textsuperscript{43} Based on the fact that there has been, on average, 3 outbreaks per century since 1600, occurring at irregular intervals from 10 to 50 years. (House of Lords, 2006)
\textsuperscript{44} Only Type A Influenza viruses have been known to cause pandemics. (Australian Government, 2006)
\textsuperscript{45} In addition, each of the various H and N antigens has further subtypes, so that there is, for example, considerable variety with ‘N1’ neuraminidase antigens. (House of Lords, 2006)
The Virus Mutation

Influenza viruses change continually as a result of two main mechanisms: ‘antigenic drift’ and ‘antigenic shift’.

Antigenic drift occurs all the time as a result of the inherent instability of the virus. That is, gradual mutations result in the virus envelope undergoing minor changes, resulting in a new strain that may not be recognised by antibodies developed by the body to defend against earlier influenza strains. As a result, people or other animals that have already been exposed to influenza, may be re-infected by a new, slightly different strain, although exposure to a previous strain may impart partial immunity, so that the severity of the illness is reduced. The instability of a virus means that a wide variety of discrete strains is present at any one time in different animal species. For example, H1N1 (the Spanish flu), H1N2 and H3N2 are currently circulating among people, while H7N7 and H3N8 is, at the moment, in circulation among horses.

Antigenic shift occurs more rarely, and as the word ‘shift’ implies, represents a more dramatic change in the virus. It can occur as a result of the recombination or re-assortment of two different strains affecting different species, and this appears to be one means whereby the virus can jump from one species (eg. poultry) to another (eg. humans). For instance, when both a human and an avian virus simultaneously infect the same ‘mixing vessel’ (an animal susceptible to both viruses, such as a pig), they could combine. The result would be the emergence of a virus containing a high proportion of the genetic material of existing human strains, but incorporating a new haemagglutinin, against which humans have little or no immune protection.

New research, however, shows that the effect of antigenic shift can also be achieved through mutation without recombination. An avian virus can by itself acquire the ability to infect humans and transmit from person to person without recombination in a ‘mixing vessel’. This view has come about following new research on the development of H1N1 (Spanish flu).

As a result of this fresh research, it now appears certain that the 1918 virus was a pure avian virus which, through spontaneous mutation, acquired the ability to infect humans readily and transmit from person to person. It is not known if this occurred rapidly or took place over a number of years. It is therefore possible that Spanish flu emerged as a result of a gradual process. This supposition gives rise to the current concern that the same process may occur with the H5N1 virus, ie. that it will spontaneously mutate into a virulent human-to-human virus that kills or temporarily incapacitates a large proportion of the population.

THE START OF A PANDEMIC?

Based on a report by the Secretariat to the Executive Board of WHO in 2004, for a pandemic to start, three conditions need to be met:\(^51\):

- A novel virus subtype must emerge to which the general population will have no or little immunity.
- The new virus must be able to replicate in humans and cause serious illness.
- The new virus must be efficiently transmitted from one human to another; efficient human-to-human transmission is seen as sustained chains of transmission causing community-wide outbreaks."

Source: World Health Organization, 2004

The first two of these conditions have been met: we know that a novel virus (H5N1) has emerged. It has infected people and animals, and has shown that it can replicate and cause serious illness. However, there is little evidence at present of efficient or sustained human-to-human transmission of the virus\(^52\), even accounting for the known cases of human-to-human transfer of the disease in Cambodia, Indonesia, Thailand and Vietnam, which have all been within the single family groups living in the same house.

With a view to monitoring progress towards the fulfilment of these conditions more closely, WHO\(^53\) has published a table summarising the various phases of pandemics. This table is reproduced in Table 1.

Based on this criteria, the world currently stands at Phase 4, that is, small cluster(s) with limited human-to-human transmission, but with a highly localised spread, suggesting that the virus is not well adapted to humans. Given that the H5N1 virus emerged as long ago as 1997 and yet has only in limited cases succeeded in adapting to human-to-human transmission, some suggest that this provides some comfort\textsuperscript{54}. Further, it is not known to what extent the current outbreak of H5N1 influenza in birds increases the likelihood of a human pandemic\textsuperscript{55}. Others suggest that the risk is much higher\textsuperscript{56}.

The position reached from the research undertaken for this paper is that many uncertainties remain. What can be said with some certainty is that on the basis of its summary of pandemic phases, WHO warns that the world is closer now to an influenza pandemic than at any time since 1968. There are good reasons to treat the possibility of the development and spread of the H5N1 virus very seriously\textsuperscript{57}. On the other hand, the number of reported cases of humans being infected remains relatively low at under 300.

\section*{Update for Swine Influenza}

The 2009 swine flu outbreak in humans is due to a new strain of Influenza A virus, subtype H1N1, which derives in part from human influenza, avian influenza, and two separate strains of swine influenza. The origins of this new strain are not known, and the World Organization for Animal Health (“OIE”) reports that it has not been isolated in swine\textsuperscript{58}.

What is different about swine influenza when compared to H5NI avian flu is that it passes with apparent ease from human to human; an ability attributed to an as yet unidentified mutation\textsuperscript{59}. In most cases, the strain causes only mild symptoms and the infected person makes a full recovery without requiring medical attention and without the use of antiviral medicines\textsuperscript{60}. Having said this, it is believed that this strain is a descendant of the deadly Spanish flu mentioned earlier.

With this in mind, medical researchers worldwide are carefully watching the latest 2009 outbreak of swine flu and making contingency plans for a possible global pandemic.

\section*{Australian Government Declares Swine Influenza a Quarantinable Disease}

On 28 March 2009, the Australian Government included swine influenza to be a quarantinable disease in humans under the \textit{Quarantine Act} 1908. This Government action was taken on the advice of the Chief Medical Officer, Professor Jim Bishop.

Making swine influenza a quarantinable disease ensures that the Federal government has the power under the Quarantine Act to take appropriate actions in an emergency to prevent or control the spread of a disease\textsuperscript{61}.

Swine Influenza – Signs & Symptoms

According to the Centers for Disease Control & Prevention ("CDC"), the symptoms of swine flu in humans are similar to those of influenza and influenza-like illness in general. Symptoms include fever, cough, sore throat, body aches, headache, chills and fatigue. The 2009 outbreak has shown an increased percentage of patients reporting diarrhea and vomiting.

As these symptoms are not specific to swine flu, a differential diagnosis of probable swine flu requires not only symptoms but also a high likelihood of swine flu due to the person's recent history. For example, at the time of writing, physicians are looking at possible links between the patient and a source of swine flu. A diagnosis of confirmed swine flu requires laboratory testing of a respiratory sample (a simple nose and throat swab).

Note: Anyone showing any of these signs should immediately contact their medical adviser.
Section 5
THE LIKELY IMPACT OF A PANDEMIC

One of the major difficulties faced by all governments, insurers, and reinsurers in planning for a possible influenza pandemic, is the huge uncertainty over its likely impact. Scientific and economic advances since 1968 should mean that the international community is better prepared for a pandemic than ever before. However, the example of the relatively small-scale outbreak of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (“SARS”) in 2003 demonstrates the economic losses that can arise as a result of new diseases. SARS also showed the social dislocation and, perhaps more significantly, the extent of the control measures required to prevent the spread of a new virulent disease.

The three influenza pandemics of the twentieth century demonstrate the enormous variability of the virus. The 1918 pandemic was among the most destructive and fast-moving ever known, with previously healthy young adults dropping dead in the street. The mortality rate among those infected is thought to have been about 3%. In contrast, the 1957 and 1968 viruses were, though affecting very large numbers, of similar severity to normal seasonal influenza, with mortality rates in the range 0.2% to 0.4%.

This raises a broader question: What causes mortality in influenza cases? In the case of ordinary seasonal influenza, the ‘at risk’ groups are the elderly, the very young, and those with chronic respiratory conditions or depressed immune responses. Members of these groups are susceptible both to direct attack by the virus on the respiratory system and to secondary infections, such as pneumonia.

However, in 1918-19, the highest mortality rates were seen in young adults. It may be that they did not die as a result of the direct action of the virus, but as a consequence of their own immune response. Proteins called cytokines, a normal part of the immune response, can be harmful if over-produced, damaging the lungs and other organs. This could explain why those with the strongest immune response had the highest mortality rates.

Scientists state that it is impossible to say what form the H5N1 virus will take if it acquires virulent human-to-human transmissibility. However, it resembles the 1918 H1N1 virus in virulence, and has hitherto mutated in similar ways. If it continues to do so, remaining a pure avian virus, there is concern that it would bring a significantly higher mortality rate than the 1957 or 1968 pandemics, and also possibly kill a disproportionate number of young adults. Against the backdrop of these uncertainties, the government’s assumptions that there would be an attack rate of 30% to 40% and a mortality rate of 0.37% in those affected (producing mortality in Australia of around 30,000) appear to be at the lower end of possible estimates.

62 Ibid.
63 Australian-based insurers met claims arising from the cancellation or curtailment of conferences and trade shows where overseas delegates and/or exhibitors (predominately from Asia) were to have attended. International insurers also met business interruption claims flowing from SARS in many countries, with international hotels perhaps having the largest claims.

At the time of writing, no estimates have been made in respect to the much more recent swine influenza.

The economic costs of a pandemic are equally shrouded in uncertainty. Inevitably, any analysis is broad-brush and subject to enormous uncertainty; for instance, the groups most at risk, who could be either the elderly or the young and economically active. Similarly, the direct consequences of excess mortality and absenteeism do not appear to take into account secondary effects, such as the impact of school closure and resulting absenteeism of working mothers; or the potential disruption to transport networks either as a direct result of illness or of control measures. Yet another secondary effect is that many employees will be torn between caring for sick relatives and going to work.

During a pandemic, such costs would be replicated around the world. In a paper presented to a WHO conference in Geneva on 7-9 November 2003, the World Bank put the total cost of a pandemic to the world economy speculatively at over $1,000 billion, representing about 2% of global GDP over a whole year (compared with a 2% loss to east Asian GDP as a result of SARS in the second quarter of 2003).

To put this into an Australian perspective, using the 2006 official GDP of $922,637 million, even a 2% loss of GDP would cost the Australian economy $18,452,740,000. For the financial year ended 30 June 2008, the Australian insurance industry paid out $14,646,000,000.

It is highly unlikely that the insurance industry would have the financial reserves to meet the worldwide claims arising out of a pandemic of this size. Similarly, it is unrealistic to believe that Australian-based or foreign insurers would be able to financially cope with losses arising out of business interruption claims in Australia flowing from such a pandemic.

TREATMENT & PREVENTION

In most healthy people, influenza will resolve itself in 7 to 10 days. Simple remedies to ease symptoms are all that is needed. However, in the case of a pandemic, medical intervention either to prevent or treat infection will be required. Infection can be prevented by vaccination; or the disease itself can be treated by use of antiviral drugs77.

Vaccination

The vaccine contains a killed version of the influenza virus, which stimulates the body to produce antibodies. The effect is not immediate—it takes about two weeks for the body to create enough antibodies to resist infection by the live virus78.

Vaccination against seasonal influenza is a well-established part of health care in developed countries79. The instability of the virus means that new strains emerge constantly, with the result that immunisation is provided every autumn in Australia on the basis of an informed analysis of the likeliest strains that will circulate in the coming winter80. Immunisation prevents most cases, although protection varies with age, health status, and how closely the virus strains contained in the vaccine actually match those that ultimately circulate. However, even if the vaccine does not prevent the disease, the presence of antibodies can reduce the severity of flu symptoms and decrease the risk of complications81.

From the point of view of pandemic contingency planning, the crucial point is that influenza vaccines are specific to particular strains of the virus. Vaccination against the currently circulating strains of the H3N2 virus, for instance, will offer no protection against H5N1 strains, and only limited protection against newer strains of H3N2 itself. The government has recently ordered doses of H5N1 vaccine for at-risk and key workers, based on the current avian virus82. However, while this may protect against the current circulating strain of avian flu, there is no guarantee that it will offer protection against any pandemic strain of H5N1 emerging in future83.

This need to tailor vaccines to particular strains means that only when a new pandemic strain has emerged can it be isolated and rendered safe, and only then will it be possible to commence vaccine production. According to Dr John Wood of the National Institute for Biological Sciences & Control (UK), the process before a viral strain can be made safe for distribution to vaccine manufacturers would take "about ten or eleven weeks"84. From that point, the manufacturers would have to incubate the virus in hens’ eggs, harvest, purify and prepare the vaccine, and distribute it to health services. In the words of Dr Kevin Bryett of Chiron Vaccines, "from the receipt of the antigen to the first product being available is about 4 to 6 months"85.

85  Bryett, 2005, as reported in House of Lords (2006)
Under current conditions, this means that from the first outbreak of an influenza pandemic to the availability of vaccine (initially in small quantities), could take anything from 7 to 9 months. By this time, the first wave of the pandemic, and possibly even the second wave, would have passed.

Antivirals

Much has been said of antivirals in the press. This is because antiviral drugs will be the most important weapon available to health services to facilitate rapid response to a pandemic. Antivirals work by inhibiting the action of particular proteins on the virus. The four medications available to treat influenza can be divided into two classes:

- Amantadine and rimantadine, so-called ‘M2 inhibitors’, which probably work by preventing the virus from entering the host cell.
- Zanamivir (sold as Relenza) and oseltamivir (sold as Tamiflu), so-called ‘neuraminidase inhibitors’, which work by blocking the release of the virus from an infected cell.

These drugs act directly on the virus, rather than stimulating the production of antibodies. They appear to be most effective when used to prevent infection in those that have been exposed to the virus. They are also effective in treating the disease, as long as they are taken within 48 hours of the onset of symptoms—the earlier the better. If used in this way, they can reduce the severity and duration of symptoms, as well as the spread of the disease to others. However, antivirals work only so long as they are being taken—they confer no long-term immunity, and the protection ceases as soon as the course is completed. As such, they are not a substitute for immunisation.

Many of the strains of the H5N1 avian influenza circulating in Southeast Asia show signs of resistance to amantadine. Therefore, pandemic preparedness plans have focused on neuraminidase inhibitors, particularly oseltamivir which, as it is available in tablet form, is easily stored and administered. Governments and the WHO are keeping a very close eye on any indication of the emergence of resistance to oseltamivir.

Swine Influenza - Treatment

The Australian Medical Association recommends the use of Tamiflu (oseltamivir) or Relenza (zanamivir) for the treatment and/or prevention of infection with swine influenza viruses. However, it was noted that the majority of people infected with the virus make a full recovery without requiring medical attention or antiviral drugs.

The virus isolates that have been tested from the US and Mexico are, however, resistant to the drugs amantadine and rimantadine. If a person gets sick, antiviral drugs can make the illness milder and make the patient feel better faster, and may also prevent serious flu complications. For treatment, antiviral drugs work best if started soon after getting sick (within 2 days of symptoms).

Tamiflu

Tamiflu is an antiviral medicine that blocks the action of the neuraminidase enzyme on the surface of the influenza virus. When neuraminidase is inhibited, the virus is not able to spread to and infect other cells in the body\textsuperscript{96}.

Under Australian Government regulations, Tamiflu is only available with a prescription from a general practitioner\textsuperscript{97}. Unlike Australia, in New Zealand a pharmacist can dispense Tamiflu without a prescription during the influenza season (May to September).

Roche, a manufacturer of Tamiflu, claims to have ample stocks of the drug for the upcoming influenza season\textsuperscript{98}.

Other Precautions - Pandemics

Finally, there are simple precautions that everyone can take to reduce, if not avoid, the risk of infection. Influenza spreads when an infected person sneezes or coughs. Infection occurs when droplets are inhaled, or when the virus is picked up from a contaminated surface and then passed to the mouth or nose. The best way to prevent the spread of influenza is by limiting the spread of droplets (using a handkerchief, covering the mouth and nose) and by hand-washing to prevent contamination\textsuperscript{99}. The Australian government-issued guidance on pandemic influenza explains these simple precautions fully\textsuperscript{100}.

The difficulty is that it is believed many in the population will not follow these simple rules despite all the warnings\textsuperscript{101}. Further, many employers, including those whose staff come into contact with literally thousands of people (eg. checkout operators), have not stocked up on basic supplies of antibacterial alcohol-based hand wash\textsuperscript{102}.

While face masks may have some value, the virus particles are too small to be caught by a normal surgical or dust mask, and there is no good evidence that the routine wearing of a mask will protect a wearer from catching influenza. However, the mask may slightly reduce the risk of an infected person passing the disease on to others. The mask should be a filtering face-piece mask, have a good fit and be changed regularly\textsuperscript{103}. Here again, experts are reporting that some employees will refuse to wear the mask, saying that it is too difficult or uncomfortable, particularly for long periods of time\textsuperscript{104}.

Preventative Measures – Influenza

At the moment, there is no vaccination specifically for swine flu, so preventative measures will be helpful, especially for operations at risk, such as farms.

It is recommended that business owners consider implementing a sick day policy if one is not already in place, as it can help keep ill employees from infecting the rest of the workforce. (People typically are infectious for 3 to 7 days once infected.)

Stress the use of proper basic hygiene, such as avoiding hand-to-hand contact, washing hands, use of a tissue or handkerchief when coughing or sneezing, and avoiding hand-face contact when prudent.

INTERNATIONAL RESPONSE TO THREAT OF PANDEMIC BY THE INSURANCE INDUSTRY

As part of this project I wrote to a number of contacts around the world to determine the approach taken by the local industry to the threat of a pandemic arising out of avian influenza. I received replies of varying quality from which I compiled the following summary.

Asia

While most insurers have implemented a blanket exclusion for all infectious disease, some local insurers have not yet done so. It is, however, expected that as their reinsurance treaties come up for renewal, this will change.

The international carriers have been quick to introduce the blanket exclusion, however, some exclusions are potentially ambiguous.

United States

Many underwriters' forms did not provide cover before the outbreak of H5N1, as the policies have a material damage proviso limiting cover to damage arising from an insured event at the situation. However, where an underwriter has provided an extension of cover, most have restricted cover with an almost blanket exclusion for infectious disease.

International US carriers abroad have arguably been the more proactive in excluding or limiting exposures.

Europe (excluding UK)

Many wordings provided cover until some time after the outbreak of the H5NI avian flu. At the time of writing this revised 2009 paper, the cover had been removed due to the requirement of reinsurance treaties.

United Kingdom

On the following page is the Lloyds Special Wording (LSW1588), which was introduced in March 2006. LSW1588 appears to be the most common exclusion in place, although other more restrictive wordings are also being used by non-UK carriers.

You will note that the exclusion is specific to avian influenza, which is regarded in the market as being a more realistic approach to the threat of this specific danger than the overreaction to terrorism that resulted from ‘September 11’.
Section 8

REINSURERS’ RESPONSE

It is clear that reinsurers such as Munich Re and Swiss Re are driving the reduction in cover, as they are particularly concerned at the accumulation exposure that they have from their global operations.
Section 9

AUSTRALIAN RESPONSE TO THREAT OF PANDEMIC

Australian insurers have adopted what can be categorised into two broad categories of approach for limiting their exposure to the threat of losses arising out of a pandemic caused by avian influenza.

1. The introduction of an exclusion that deletes cover arising from a quarantinable disease.

2. The failure to grant cover in respect of losses arising out of all human-to-human disease. In some cases, insurers have taken this one step further, and they are either no longer offering or refusing to grant cover for murder and suicide and other similar risks.

I offer comment on each of these approaches as follows.

Exclusion for Quarantinable Diseases

While the wordings used within the industry are not completely uniform, the following sample of a QBE Insurance Australia Limited’s exclusion that came into force in respect of Industrial Special Risks, Business Packages and Office Packages for new business and renewals from 1 March 2007, provides a good example.

Infectious, Contagious Diseases Exclusion Clause - where the Business Interruption section of this policy provides cover for:

(a) reduction in business income (howsoever described including but not limited to reductions impacting upon revenue, income, profit, rent received or rent payable); or

(b) any additional increased cost of working arising from human infectious or contagious disease and whether:

(i) discovered at the location of your premises, or

(ii) out-breaking elsewhere within the limits of any specified radius of your premises location, this cover shall not apply in respect of highly pathogenic Avian Influenza or any disease declared to be a quarantinable disease under the Quarantine Act 1908 (as amended).

[Emphasis mine]

For the sake of completeness, I attach a copy of the Quarantine Act of 1908 (Cth)-Act No.3 of 1908 as amended, at Appendix A.
In Table 2 below, I have listed the diseases that currently fall within the definition of the Act. You will note that the list includes another disease that was of concern: SARS (Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome).

The approach taken by those in the London market would appear, on the face of it, to be less restrictive. The reality is that many of the Australian insurers have decided that for practical reasons, it is better to address the issue of past and future pandemics in one swoop rather than issuing a fresh exclusion each time a new threat emerges. This approach has some merit and, in fact, reduces the burden of disclosure on brokers and insurers alike while diminishing the likelihood of our industry being called into question for reducing cover every time a new threat emerges. This strategy now serves insurers well with the outbreak of swine influenza.

The following insurers adopted the ‘quarantinable disease’ exclusion approach following the outbreak of the H5N1 avian influenza outbreak:

- Allianz Australia Insurance Limited
- AMP General Insurance Company Ltd
- Calliden Group
- CGU Insurance Limited
- GIO General Limited
- QBE Insurance Australia Limited
- SGIC Insurance
- SGIQ Insurance
- Suncorp-Metway Limited
- Vero Insurance Limited
- Zurich Insurance Limited

In view of the market strength of the insurers in the above list, it is possible that within a short period, more insurers and underwriting agencies moved to this approach.

Many of these insurers have also moved to a sub-limit and a time deductible, often 48 or 72 hours.
It is worth noting that business interruption can also result from epidemics of animal diseases (e.g. anthrax, foot and mouth, Newcastle disease, and the like). In 2007, we saw the outbreak of equine flu in Australia.

By tradition, most Australian insurers have not offered animal-to-human cover for animal disease. It has been available on request through the London Market. Such cover has on occasion been sought by Insureds particularly susceptible to this hazard such as those in the poultry industry.

No Cover or Blanket Exclusion in respect of Human-to-Human Disease

In this category, insurers have opted to remove the cover they may have afforded under a Business Pack, Office Pack or Strata Title Policy for human-to-human disease, but often the insurers are extending this to exclude cover for murder, suicide and the like.

As you are no doubt aware, neither the Mark IV nor the Mark V versions of the Industrial Special Risks Policy provide cover for infectious disease, in either the Advisory or Modified forms. However, two ‘industry’ extensions have been widely used in the Australian market since the introduction of the Mark IV Industrial Special Risks Policy in 1987. Table 3 reproduces these two exclusions, along with a commentary on the use of the endorsement prior to the new threat of avian influenza.

Businesses particularly exposed to interruption by this group of risks include private schools, private hotels and guest houses, restaurants, theatres and exhibition halls, sporting complexes, hospitals, supermarkets, department stores, etc. Paragraph (c) is restricted by tradition to human diseases, but business interruption can also result from epidemics of animal diseases (eg. anthrax, foot and mouth, Newcastle disease, etc.) With the increased threat of terrorism, many insurers had been agreeing to this endorsement with paragraph (f) removed. Paragraphs (a), (c) and in some cases (d), are now being removed or restricted by underwriters.</td>

Loss as insured by the policy resulting from interruption of or interference with the Business directly or indirectly arising from:

(a) infectious or contagious disease manifested by any person whilst at the Premises;

(b) closure or evacuation of the whole or part of the Premises by order of a competent public Authority consequent upon vermin or pests or defects in the drains or other sanitary arrangements at the Premises;

(c) the outbreak of a notifiable human infectious or contagious disease occurring within 40 kilometres of the Premises;

(d) injury, illness or disease directly caused by the consumption of food or drink provided on the Premises;

(e) murder or suicide occurring in or at the Premises; or

(f) threat or fear of violent damage to the Premises and/or injury to persons therein; shall be deemed to be loss resulting from Damage to property used by the Insured at the Premises. Perils Exclusion 7(d) and Property Exclusion 2(e) shall not apply to the cover granted by this endorsement.

The approach taken by insurers in this category is to decline to grant cover for either of these two endorsements or to grant cover for paragraph (e) only, i.e. murder and suicide at the premises.

A business can be affected by an outbreak of disease. For example, an outbreak of measles can prevent a child care centre from operating, while legionnaires disease can shut down a shopping centre, office tower or tourist facility. Disruption to business from such causes has been relatively infrequent and easily absorbed by the insurance industry, which has traditionally found business interruption insurance to be one of the more profitable classes. To withdraw cover for these one-off events would appear to be an overreaction to the threat posed by avian influenza.

While this approach was initially taken by some overseas and Australian insurers, market pressure made many of them change their stance. However, brokers and insurance advisers should carefully check the cover in place for their clients.
Section 10
UNDERWRITING AGENCIES

I have not attempted to survey the myriad of underwriting agencies that operate in Australia. However, as a ‘rule of thumb’, underwriting agencies are following the lead of the insurer behind them. For example, Interruption Underwriting Agencies ("IUA"), specialising in business interruption, follow the lead of their carrier-currently Calliden Group.

I stress that this is only a ‘rule of thumb’ and should not be relied upon as a definitive guide.

Section 11
SPECIFIC CONCERNS CONSIDERED

When I set out to prepare this white paper on infectious disease cover, two major concerns were taken into account.

(a) The traditional cover would be reduced considerably as a result of an overreaction to the threat of avian influenza (‘throwing the baby out with the bath water’).

(b) An inconsistent approach adopted by insurers could result in a derogation of cover for infectious disease when a broker changes insurance carriers for any reason.

In response to issue (a), it is noted that the majority of major insurers in Australia have taken what can fairly be said to be a reasonable approach to the threat caused by avian influenza and the H5N1 strain in particular. This approach has served to protect them well with the outbreak of swine flu.

As explained in this paper, the potential loss to the Australian economy in a ‘worst case’ scenario is so great that the insurance industry would, in all likelihood, fail to meet all claims and, worse still, may well threaten the ongoing viability of the insurance industry. As such, some limitation of cover is required. However, unlike the gross overreaction to the threat of terrorism, the measured approach adopted by the majority of the major insurers in reducing coverage only for quarantinable diseases of humans, as stated above, appears to be reasonable.

On the other hand, the response has not been uniform and some insurers have opted to restrict cover for all disease; in some cases, going further and reducing cover for murder and suicide which, purely by tradition, have often been bundled up with the infectious disease cover. This is, in the opinion of the writer, a gross overreaction to the threat at hand.
This report recommends two courses of action be adopted by insurance brokers and advisers.

The first is that brokers and advisers be aware of the varying approaches taken by insurers, and that there is a genuine exposure to brokers and advisers where cover is moved from one underwriter to another and the broker/adviser fails in their duty to adequately advise the Insured of any reduction in cover. In the case of infectious disease cover, this could occur where the broker/adviser moves cover from an insurer that provides cover for human disease subject to an exclusion for quarantinable diseases of humans, to one that has withdrawn cover completely.

The second is that brokers and advisers use the outbreak of swine influenza to introduce Business Continuity Management to their clients. This latest outbreak comes on top of the World Financial Crisis, which has already increased the risk awareness in their clients. To learn more about this subject, visit www.ContinuityCoach.com.

Notes 225
An Act relating to Quarantine

Part I—Introductory

1 Short title [see Note 1]

This Act may be cited as the Quarantine Act 1908.

2 Commencement [see Note 1]

This Act shall commence on a day to be fixed by proclamation.

2A Power to supersede Quarantine measures under State Acts

(1) Whenever the Governor-General is satisfied that an emergency exists which makes it necessary to do so, he or she may, by proclamation, declare that any or all measures of quarantine prescribed by or under any State Act shall, for such period as is specified in the proclamation, cease to have effect, and such measure shall thereupon cease to have effect accordingly.

(2) The Governor-General may at any time revoke or vary any such proclamation.

2B Proclamation in event of epidemic

(1) Where the Governor-General is satisfied that an epidemic caused by a quarantinable disease or quarantinable pest or danger of such an epidemic exists in a part of the Commonwealth, the Governor-General may, by proclamation, declare the existence in that part of the Commonwealth of that epidemic or of the danger of that epidemic.

(2) Upon the issue of a proclamation under subsection (1) the Minister may, during the period the proclamation remains in force, give such directions and take such action as he or she thinks necessary to control and eradicate the epidemic, or to remove the danger of the epidemic, by quarantine measures or measures incidental to quarantine.
Part I Introductory

Note: Under section 149.1 of the Criminal Code, it is an offence to obstruct a person who is taking any action that the person is authorised to take under this subsection.

(2A) If the Governor-General is satisfied that the epidemic or danger of an epidemic to which a proclamation issued under subsection (1) relates has the potential so to affect an industry of national significance that it calls for the exercise of coordinated response powers in accordance with section 3, the Governor-General may, in the proclamation issued under subsection (1), declare it to be a proclamation to which section 3 applies.

(2B) A direction may be given, or an action taken, by the Minister under subsection (2) despite the provisions of any other Commonwealth law, or of any law of a State or Territory.

(3) A person is guilty of an offence if:
(a) a direction is given to the person under subsection (2); and
(b) the person fails to comply with the direction.

Maximum penalty: Imprisonment for 10 years.

(4) In paragraph (3)(a), strict liability applies to the physical element of circumstance, that the direction given to the person was under subsection (2).

Note: For strict liability, see section 6.1 of the Criminal Code.

3 Coordinated response powers

(1) If a proclamation under subsection 2B(1) is declared to be a proclamation to which this section applies, the Minister may, during the period the proclamation remains in force, by instrument in writing:
(a) authorise persons who are the executive heads of national response agencies:
   (i) to give such directions; and
   (ii) to take such action;

   as the persons think necessary, subject to any conditions or limitations specified under subsection (4):
   (iii) to control and eradicate the epidemic; or
   (iv) to remove the danger of the epidemic;

2 Quarantine Act 1908
by quarantine measures or measures incidental to quarantine; or
(b) revoke any authorisation so given.

(2) If the Minister, under subsection (1), authorises the executive head of a national response agency to give directions, and to take action, in accordance with that subsection, the executive head of that agency may, while that authorisation remains in force, by instrument in writing:
(a) authorise a person performing duties in that agency:
   (i) to give such directions of a kind that the executive head of the agency could give and that are specified in the instrument; or
   (ii) to take such action of a kind that the executive head of the agency could take and that is specified in the instrument;
   as the person considers necessary, subject to any conditions or limitations specified under subsection (4):
   (iii) to control and eradicate the epidemic; or
   (iv) to remove the danger of the epidemic;
   by quarantine measures or measures incidental to quarantine; or
(b) revoke any authorisation so given.

(3) If an authorisation is given under subsection (1) or (2) to the holder of a specified office or position, the authorisation is to be taken to be an authorisation of any person from time to time holding, occupying, or performing the duties of, that office or position.

(4) An authorisation given to a person under subsection (1) or (2) may be expressed to be subject to such conditions or other limitations (if any) as are specified in the authorisation.

(5) If a person ceases to be the executive head of a national response agency, any authorisation of other persons in force under subsection (2) immediately before the cessation:
(a) is taken, on and after that cessation, to have been given by the person’s successor and, subject to paragraph (b), continues to have effect according to its tenor; and
(b) may, by writing, be varied or revoked by that successor.
(6) An authorisation given to a person under subsection (1) or (2) does not affect any power that the person may be authorised to exercise apart from this section.

(7) An authorisation given under subsection (1) or (2) in respect of a particular epidemic or danger of an epidemic is taken to be revoked when the proclamation issued under subsection 2B(1) in respect of that epidemic or danger of an epidemic is revoked.

(8) A direction may be given, or an action taken, by a person under this section despite the provisions of any other Commonwealth law, or of any law of a State or Territory.

(9) A person is guilty of an offence if:
   (a) a direction is given to the person under this section; and
   (b) the person fails to comply with the direction.

   Maximum penalty: Imprisonment for 10 years.

(10) In paragraph (9)(a), strict liability applies to the physical element of circumstance, that the giving of the direction was under this section.

   Note: For strict liability, see section 6.1 of the Criminal Code.

   (a) an authorisation given by the Minister under subsection 3(1); or
   (b) an authorisation given by the executive head of a national response agency under subsection 3(2); to be acting as, exercising the powers of, or performing the functions of, a quarantine officer.

(12) In this section, a reference to a person performing duties in an agency includes, but is not limited to:
   (a) a person performing duties in the agency under a contract; and
   (b) a person performing duties in the agency as a result of an arrangement for the temporary provision to that agency of the services of persons ordinarily performing other duties in the same or in another jurisdiction; and

Note: Under section 149.1 of the Criminal Code, it is an offence to obstruct a person who is taking any action that the person is authorised to take under this section.

(2) Without otherwise limiting the nature of any quarantine measure, or measure incidental to quarantine:
   (a) by way of a direction that a person may be authorised to give; or
   (b) by way of an action that a person may be authorised to take; either as a result of a Ministerial authorisation under subsection 3(1) or as a result of an authorisation by the executive head of a national response agency under subsection 3(2), that direction or action must be no more than is reasonably appropriate and adapted:
       (c) to the control and eradication of the epidemic; or

(3) Subsection (2) does not apply if the person has a reasonable excuse.

(4) However, the magistrate must not issue the warrant unless the officer or some other person has given to the magistrate, either orally or by affidavit, such further information (if any) as the magistrate requires concerning the grounds on which the issue of the warrant is being sought.

Content of warrant

(5) The warrant must:

   (ii) to carry out vector monitoring and control activities either generally, or as specified in the warrant; and

Section 55G

(c) state whether the entry and carrying out of activities is authorised to be made at any time of the day or night or during specified hours of the day or night.

66AC  Monitoring warrants

(a) deciding whether to exercise a power under this Act; or
(b) finding out:

(i) whether this Act has been complied with; and
(ii) if the premises are in the Cocos Islands or in Christmas Island—whether any domestic animals are on the premises.

(3) The magistrate must not issue a warrant unless the quarantine officer or another person has given the magistrate, either orally (on oath or affirmation) or by affidavit, such further information as the magistrate requires about the grounds on which the issue of the warrant is being sought.

(4) The warrant must:

(a) authorise a quarantine officer named in the warrant, with such assistance and by such force as is necessary and reasonable, from time to time, while the warrant remains in force:

(i) to enter the premises; and
(ii) to exercise powers of the kind set out in section 66AA in relation to the premises; and

Division 3  Offence-related searches and seizures

Section 66AE

Division 3—Offence-related searches and seizures

66AE  Offence-related searches and seizures

(1) Subject to subsection (2), if a quarantine officer has reasonable grounds for suspecting that there may be, on any premises, particular evidential material, the officer, at any time and with any necessary help, may:
   (a) enter the premises; and
   (b) exercise the powers set out in section 66AA; and
   (c) seize that evidential material, if the officer finds it on the premises.

(2) A quarantine officer is not authorised to enter premises under subsection (1) unless:
   (a) the premises are:
      (i) premises approved for the purposes of a provision of this Act; or
      (ii) a quarantine station; or
      (iii) premises at which procedures are authorised under a compliance agreement to be carried out; or
   (b) the occupier of the premises has consented to the entry.

(3) If the relevant premises are a vessel or vehicle, a quarantine officer may stop and detain the vessel or vehicle for the purpose of exercising a power conferred by subsection (1).

66AF  Offence-related warrants

(1) A quarantine officer may apply to a magistrate for a warrant under this section in relation to particular premises.

(2) Subject to subsection (3), a magistrate may issue the warrant if satisfied, by information on oath or affirmation, that there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that there is, or may be within the next 72 hours, any evidential material at the premises.

150  Quarantine Act 1908
(3) A magistrate must not issue a warrant unless the quarantine officer or some other person has given the magistrate, either orally (on oath or affirmation) or by affidavit, such further information as the magistrate requires about the grounds on which the issue of the warrant is being sought.

(4) The warrant must:
   (a) state the offence to which the warrant relates; and
   (b) describe the premises to which the warrant relates; and
   (c) describe the kinds of evidential material that are to be searched for under the warrant; and
   (d) state the name of the quarantine officer who is to be responsible for executing the warrant; and
   (e) state the period for which the warrant remains in force, which must not be more than 7 days; and
   (f) state whether the warrant may be executed at any time of the day or night or only during specified hours of the day or night.

(5) The warrant must also state that the warrant authorises the seizure of a thing (other than evidential material of the kind referred to in paragraph (4)(c)) found at the premises in the course of the search that the executing officer or an officer assisting believes on reasonable grounds to be:
   (a) evidential material in relation to an offence to which the warrant relates; or
   (b) evidential material in relation to another offence against this Act;

if the executing officer or an officer assisting believes on reasonable grounds that seizure of the thing is necessary to prevent its concealment, loss or destruction or its use in committing an offence against this Act.

(6) Paragraph (4)(e) does not prevent the issue of successive warrants in relation to the same premises.

(7) If the application for the warrant is made under section 66AH, this section applies as if:
   (a) subsection (2) referred to 48 hours rather than 72 hours; and
   (b) paragraph (4)(e) referred to 48 hours rather than 7 days.
66AG  The things that are authorised by a search warrant

(1) A warrant under this Division that is in force in relation to premises authorises the executing officer or an officer assisting:
   (a) to enter the premises; and
   (b) to exercise the powers set out in section 66AA; and
   (c) to search the premises and any thing on the premises for the kinds of evidential material specified in the warrant, and to seize things of those kinds found at the premises; and
   (d) to seize other things found at the premises in the course of the search that the executing officer or an officer assisting believes on reasonable grounds to be:
      (i) evidential material in relation to an offence to which the warrant relates; or
      (ii) evidential material in relation to another offence against this Act;
   if the executing officer or an officer assisting believes on reasonable grounds that seizure of the thing is necessary to prevent its concealment, loss or destruction or its use in committing an offence against this Act.

(2) If the warrant states that it may be executed only during particular hours, the warrant must not be executed outside those hours.

(3) If things are seized under a warrant, the warrant authorises the executing officer to make the things available to officers of other agencies if it is necessary to do so for the purpose of investigating or prosecuting an offence to which the things relate.
Division 4—Warrants granted by telephone or other electronic means

66AH Warrants may be granted by telephone or other electronic means

(1) A quarantine officer may apply to a magistrate for a warrant under section 55G, 66AC or 66AF by telephone, facsimile or other electronic means:
   (a) in an urgent case; or
   (b) if the delay that would occur if an application were made in person would frustrate the effective execution of the warrant.

(2) The magistrate may require voice communication to the extent that it is practicable in the circumstances.

(3) An application under this section must include all information required to be provided in an ordinary application for a warrant under section 55G, 66AC or 66AF, as the case requires, but the application may, if necessary, be made before the information is sworn or affirmed.

(4) If a magistrate to whom an application is made under this section is satisfied:
   (a) after having considered the information mentioned in subsection (3); and
   (b) after having received any further information that the magistrate requires about the grounds on which the issue of the warrant is being sought; that there are reasonable grounds for issuing the warrant, the magistrate may complete and sign the same form of warrant as would be issued under section 55G, 66AC or 66AF, as the case requires.

(5) If a magistrate signs a warrant under subsection (4):
   (a) the magistrate must notify the quarantine officer, by telephone, facsimile or other electronic means, of the terms of the warrant and the date on which and the time at which it was signed, and write on it the reasons for granting it; and
(b) the officer must complete a form of warrant in the terms notified to the officer by the magistrate and write on it the name of the magistrate and the date on which and the time at which it was signed.

(6) If a quarantine officer completes a form of warrant under subsection (5), the officer must, not later than the day after the day on which the warrant ceased to be in force or was executed, whichever is the earlier, give or send to the magistrate who signed the warrant the form of warrant completed by the officer and, if the information mentioned in subsection (3) was not sworn or affirmed, that information duly sworn or affirmed.

(7) The magistrate must attach to the documents provided under subsection (6) the warrant signed by the magistrate.

(8) A form of warrant that has been duly completed by a quarantine officer under subsection (5), and is in accordance with the terms of the warrant signed by the magistrate, is authority for any entry, search, seizure, or other exercise of power, that the warrant so signed authorises.

(9) If:

(a) it is material, in any proceedings, for a court to be satisfied that an exercise of power was authorised under this section; and

(b) the warrant signed by the magistrate under this section authorising the exercise of power is not produced in evidence;

the court must assume, unless the contrary is proved, that the exercise of power was not authorised by such a warrant.
Division 5—Stopping and searching vessels or vehicles

66AI  Searches without warrant in emergency situations

(1) This section applies if a quarantine officer suspects, on reasonable grounds, that:
   (a) particular evidential material is in or on a vessel or vehicle; and
   (b) it is necessary to exercise a power under subsection (2) in order to prevent the evidential material being concealed, lost or destroyed; and
   (c) it is necessary to exercise the power without the authority of a warrant under section 66AF because the circumstances are serious and urgent.

(2) The quarantine officer may:
   (a) stop and detain the vessel or vehicle; and
   (b) search the vessel or vehicle and any thing in or on it for the evidential material; and
   (c) seize the evidential material if he or she finds it there.

(3) If, in the course of searching for the evidential material, the quarantine officer finds other evidential material, the officer may seize the other evidential material if he or she suspects, on reasonable grounds, that:
   (a) it is necessary to seize it in order to prevent its concealment, loss or destruction; and
   (b) it is necessary to seize it without the authority of a warrant under section 66AF because the circumstances are serious and urgent.

(4) The quarantine officer must exercise his or her powers subject to section 66AJ.

66AJ  How a quarantine officer exercises a power under section 66AI

When a quarantine officer exercises a power under section 66AI in relation to a vessel or vehicle, he or she:
   (a) may use such assistance as is necessary; and
Section 66AJ

(b) must search the vessel or vehicle in a public place or in some other place to which members of the public have ready access; and

(c) must not detain the vessel or vehicle for longer than is necessary and reasonable to search it and any thing found in or on it; and

(d) may use such force as is necessary and reasonable in the circumstances, but must not damage the vessel or vehicle or any thing found in or on it by forcing open a part of the vessel or vehicle or thing unless:

(i) the person (if any) apparently in charge of the vessel or vehicle has been given a reasonable opportunity to open that part or thing; or

(ii) it is not possible to give that person such an opportunity.
Division 6—General rules about premises and warrants

66AK Availability of assistance, and use of force, in executing a warrant

In executing a warrant:
(a) the executing officer may obtain such assistance as is necessary and reasonable in the circumstances; and
(b) the executing officer, or a quarantine officer who is assisting in executing the warrant, may use such force against persons and things as is necessary and reasonable in the circumstances; and
(c) a person who is not a quarantine officer, but has been authorised to assist in executing the warrant, may use such force against things as is necessary and reasonable in the circumstances.

66AL Announcement before entry under warrants

(1) The executing officer must, before any person enters premises under a warrant:
(a) announce that he or she is authorised by the warrant to enter the premises; and
(b) give any person at the premises an opportunity to allow entry to the premises.

(2) The executing officer does not have to comply with subsection (1) if he or she believes on reasonable grounds that immediate entry to the premises is required to ensure:
(a) the safety of a person (including the executing officer); or
(b) that the effective execution of the warrant is not frustrated.

66AM Details of warrant to be given to occupier etc.

(1) If a warrant in relation to premises is being executed and the occupier of the premises, or another person who apparently represents the occupier, is present at the premises, the executing officer or an officer assisting must make a copy of the warrant available to that person.
Section 66AN

(2) The executing officer must identify himself or herself to the person at the premises.

(2) The right to observe the search being conducted ceases if the person impedes the search.

(3) This section does not prevent 2 or more areas of the premises being searched at the same time.

66AO Use of equipment to examine or process things

(1) A person who enters premises under this Part may bring to the premises and use any equipment reasonably necessary for the examination or processing of things found at the premises for the purposes of exercising a power conferred on the person under this Part.

(2) If:
   (a) it is not practicable to examine or process the things at the premises; or
   (b) the occupier of the premises consents in writing;
the things may be moved to another place so that the examination or processing can be carried out.

(3) If things containing electronically stored information are moved to another place under subsection (2), the person referred to in subsection (1) must, if it is practicable to do so:
   (a) tell the occupier the address of the place and the time at which the examination or processing will be carried out; and
   (b) allow the occupier, or a representative of the occupier, to be present during the examination or processing.
(4) A person who enters premises under this Part may operate equipment already at the premises to carry out the examination or processing of a thing found at the premises for the purpose of exercising a power conferred on the person under this Part, if the person believes on reasonable grounds that:
   (a) the equipment is suitable for the examination or processing; and
   (b) the examination or processing can be carried out without damage to the equipment or the thing.

66AP Use of electronic equipment at premises

(1) A person who enters premises under this Part may operate electronic equipment at the premises for the purpose of exercising a power conferred on the person under this Part if he or she believes on reasonable grounds that the operation of the equipment can be carried out without damage to the equipment.

(2) If the person, after operating the equipment, finds that evidential material is accessible by doing so, he or she may:
   (a) seize the equipment and any disk, tape or other associated device; or
   (b) if the material can, by using facilities at the premises, be put in documentary form—operate the facilities to put the material in that form and seize the documents so produced; or
   (c) if the material can be transferred to a disk, tape or other storage device:
      (i) which is brought to the premises; or
      (ii) which is at the premises and the use of which for the purpose has been agreed to in writing by the occupier of the premises; operate the equipment or other facilities to copy the material to the storage device and take the storage device from the premises.

(3) A person may seize equipment under paragraph (2)(a) only if:
   (a) it is not practicable to put the material in documentary form as mentioned in paragraph (2)(b) or to copy the material as mentioned in paragraph (2)(c); or
   (b) possession of the equipment by the occupier could constitute an offence.

For 37 years, Allan has managed large and complex losses involving major property, business interruption including advanced consequential loss, fidelity, construction and liability throughout Australia, Asia Pacific, Europe and North America. Assignments have been completed for many multi-national companies, such as ACI, Amcor, Nestle, Mitsubishi, PaperlinX, Spotless and Toyota, as well as government organisations and small to medium-sized businesses. He particularly enjoys the challenge of assisting companies to return to normal trading after a major crisis. His interest in the survival of a business following an insured loss prompted him to complete a Doctoral thesis, following 6 years of extensive research.

Over the past 10 years, Allan has been engaged to carry out risk analysis and the review of insurance programs for businesses, including multi-nationals. His lifetime of experience in managing major losses proves invaluable in this area.

Allan has lectured at RMIT on Claims Management, and has delivered over 350 seminars on various topics including risk management, ISR Policies, and Business Interruption. Dr Manning holds the post of Research Fellow with Victoria University in the faculty of Business & Law's Graduate School of Corporate Governance, and is the author of five books on insurance, including Business Interruption Insurance & Claims: A Practical Guide and the 3-volume Understanding the ISR Policy.
